Mexican Vote on the Border The following appeared in the Dal las News of recent date from El Paso In your issue of the 28th, in the olumn of "Aftermath; a D gest of the Affairs of today, "by W. O. Moore, and the following: "One of the most in teresting factures of the election was this hat while El Paso went for sound ey, the smelter district voted solidly for free silver. Here is food for thought The city of El Paso is a wide awake town. Her people have the energy and progressive spirit characteristic o the white race. The smelter distric is situated up the Rio Grande, three miles from town. The entire settle ment is made up of mud houses or upied by peons. With the exception of a few white bosses the smelter em ploys Mexicans. It is safe to say that none of these Mexican laborers can read or write, yet they piled up a vote for free silver that communities peopled by intelligent whites did not give. * * * The peon, ranging from the straight Indian of the Yaqui and Cholo opes up to the semi-intelligent ones the have a splash of Spanish blood in hem, is the element that piled up the
